Strawberry Theatre Workshop presents
“Doug Paasch's Puppet Playhouse”

SHORT DESCRIPTION:

Douglas Paasch was the Seattle’s preeminent puppeteer for more than twenty years, opening the imaginations of audiences through his ambition, versatility, and whimsy. This fall, Strawberry Theatre Workshop honors Paasch's legacy with a puppetry arts showcase at the Lee Center for the Arts at Seattle University. Including performances by regional puppet artists, Doug Paasch's Puppet Playhouse exhibits brilliance in the craft of puppet design and manipulation, nurtures innovation in the use of puppets as storytellers, and playfully celebrates the gift of imagination, which Paasch so relished and inspired.

LONG DESCRIPTION:

In her 2007 review of production Infinite Noir, Jen Graves of The Stranger, wrote, “It's nice to be asked to do some imagining in the theater.” She was praising designer/director Douglas N Paasch, who passed away suddenly just one year later.

Paasch was the puppet master of Seattle Children's Theatre for sixteen years, opening the imaginations of a generation of northwest young people. He also relished in the opportunity to integrate his work into stories not specifically designed for children, or even for puppets.

In addition to his work with SCT, Book-It, and Seattle Shakespeare Company, Paasch found an artistic home with Strawberry Theatre Workshop, where he collaborated with artistic director Greg Carter on This Land: Woody Guthrie and Thornton Wilder's The Bridge of San Luis Rey. Carter also performed in Paasch's wordless puppet play Infinite Noir.

The profound loss of Doug Paasch has never been memorialized in a way appropriate to Paasch's ambition or sense of whimsy. In 2012, Carter proposed that the most fitting tribute would be a regular exhibition of the excellence that Paasch relished and inspired: Doug Paasch's Puppet Playhouse was born.

“Do some imagining in the theater:” join us for a four-day festival showcasing the best in local puppetry, as we honor the great artistry and ambition of Douglas Paasch.
